BRIAN AUBREY
NORTHERN STAFFORDSHIRE BULL TERRIER CLUB
14th MARCH 2009

Firstly thank you for the invite to judge you Championship show, i always think it a honour to be asked to judge a breed show where ever in the World when i accepted the invite i was also agreed to doing a critique, on your Dogs/Bitches and where ever i judge i do this, but i found it so hard to find good points to write about i have decided just to look at your dogs as i seen them

I have judged thousand of Stafford's in the UK and a lot of places in the World and never had the problem of writing a critique even when i started in open shows many years ago

PLEASE take my comments as they are meant to help you in New Zealand not to hinder i will start with them being to heavy in a lot of dogs this can be sorted easy by cutting down their food and upping their exercise now down to the serious stuff i personally am a mouth fanatic and boy have you some mouth problems, a Stafford was bred as a fighting dog and with out a mouthful of good teeth he or she will not last long, Inverted Canines what is the point of cutting them down you are not fooling most judges but fooling your self's as this can and will be passed from generation to generation i know they can trouble some gums if not shaved down, but please do not breed from these animals, and there were some undershot mouths that should never be bred from, there were CHAMPIONS with mouth faults and some i had to place as they were the best in their class, in the UK i would have with held a prize card from such Dogs/Bitches one BLACK AND TAN this is a no no in Stafford,s but this one has been winning it should never be in the show ring and should never ever be bred from that for sure you have enough problems as it is without introducing Black and Tans in your breeding program fronts were not good standard reads should turn out a LITTLE at the pasterns heavy shoulders, movement was bad going and coming in some PLEASE look at the Best in show veteran to see how a Stafford should move and with a perfect top line it should say a lot that i had to go to a 9 year old veteran Bitch for the CC and Best in show, she had her faults to but well deserved top honours would have loved to seen her in her prime a credit to the breed in New Zealand the rcc bitch was very nice to but did not match the movement of the old lady

My dog cc was not a bad dog lots to like about him a little low and a bit heavy for me but thought him the best on the day the rcc dog was also a tidy dog not a lot between them speaking to a few people after judging they tell me it.s difficult to buy a puppy outright in NZ as the are restrictions on them either cant show not to be bred from this to me is crazy if i bred a good litter i would be proud that something i bred was winning and made up by some one i sold it to people were saying and i had a email about this when i got home i cant say this is true as i not seen it but breeders want to win and only them CAN win with what they are breeding for them self's Yes you should only breed if you want to keep something for your self's but give newcomer a chance to if there are people doing this They have not got the Stafford in their hearts but just the fact they are up there them self's with all the glory of winning week in week out and to hell with the little people but please remember you started some where and needed someones help to light eyes are cause for concern but this is every where in UK to, but we must try to breed it out there is nothing worse than breeding a brilliant dog and then got light eyes many years ago i bred such a dog he was every thing i could have wished for but is eyes was so light just spoilt him i castrated him and put him into a good pet home please this is only my view and i suspect Hellen will see them different thetas what judging is all about so please take what i have written in your hearts if you love the Stafford as i do, I may not not be welcome in New Zealand again after you read this but if i can only get one or two of you to look at the Stafford as i see them then i be a happy man and can live with the fact i upset a few people or the glory hunters
